The Society for the Advancement of Veterinary Education and Research (SAVER) successfully facilitated the donation of a refrigerator to the College of Veterinary Medicine as part of its continued commitment to supporting academic advancement and improving institutional resources. This initiative was made possible through the generous contributions of SAVER alumnus, Dr. Freniemer Dacaya and FMR Clinic, reflecting their dedication to giving back to the institution and supporting future generations of veterinary students.

The donation aimed to address the need for proper storage of temperature-sensitive materials used in laboratory and academic activities. Refrigeration is essential in maintaining the integrity of biological samples, reagents, vaccines, and other perishable supplies commonly utilized in veterinary education and research. By providing this equipment, SAVER sought to enhance the college's capacity to deliver quality instruction and ensure that students have access to adequate and reliable laboratory resources.

The turnover of the refrigerator was conducted in coordination with the College of Veterinary Medicine, ensuring that the unit would be allocated to an area where it would be most beneficial. The activity symbolized the strong partnership between SAVER, its alumni, and the institution, highlighting a shared goal of advancing veterinary education through meaningful support and collaboration.

Overall, the refrigerator donation was a successful initiative that provided tangible support to the College of Veterinary Medicine. It contributed to the enhancement of laboratory operations and academic activities while strengthening the relationship between SAVER, its alumni, and the institution. Through this effort, SAVER reaffirmed its commitment to promoting education, research, and continuous development within the veterinary field.
